Academic Internships in Psychology

a Psychology Department workshop in partnership with the Academic Internship Program

Are Internships Still Worthwhile?

Aside from gaining invaluable industry experience, internships are now more likely than ever to lead to a full-time job offer.

The National Association of Colleges and Employers surveyed 280 organizations representing more than 20 industries. Take a look at what they survey revealed:

1. WHY INTERN?

If the possibility of being offered a job isn’t enough of an incentive, here are a few more reasons:

- Employers want to see that students have industry experience.
- Internships allow students to decide if the industry’s right for them.
- Most colleges provide college credit for internships.
- Students will develop more industry-focused skills.
- Students can build their personal networks and resumes.

Wednesday, April 26 (10-11 am)
Mandler 3545

Register online at http://psychology.ucsd.edu